01 SEASONAL PERSPECTIVE

The Season of Connection

There is something different about a Prairie summer. Longer days and warmer evenings naturally draw us outside. We linger with others a little longer until the sun finally slips below the horizon.

Many of life's most meaningful conversations aren't planned. They happen when there is finally time to have them. Over a meal, during a walk, around a campfire, or simply sitting together as the day comes to an end.

Perhaps it is because there is finally a little more time in the day to breathe. Or perhaps it is because, just like nature, we are reminded that some things grow best when they are given time.

Whatever the reason, summer quietly creates space and all it takes is one conversation to change what comes next.

The next generations are always watching. Long before wealth is transferred, they form a relationship with it, trying to understand it, talked about it, and how it is carried. Conversations seldom happen about the inevitable responsibility.

Your planning is organized, the important details have been looked after, the strategy is in place. This summer, spend your time making memories, not managing paperwork.

02 STEWARDSHIP PRINCIPLE

Around the Table

Where to Start

For generations, wealth was most often transferred after a lifetime had been lived. Today, more families are choosing to help the next generation while they are here to see the impact.

This creates a remarkable opportunity. Financial support can ease today's pressures, but stewardship asks a broader question:

How do we pass along the wisdom that gave our wealth purpose?

The answer rarely begins with financial statements, legal documents, or estate plans. It begins with conversation. Stewardship is not one conversation. It is a lifetime of conversations.

Summer creates one of the few times each year when families naturally come together. Perhaps it starts with a story or perhaps it starts with a question.

A QUESTION TO ASK

“Did you ever feel like you were falling behind in everything?”

A STORY TO SHARE

“Let me tell you about the time we wondered if we would ever get ahead. Our mortgage climbed to 17%, every payment hurt, and there were nights we lay awake wondering if we were failing. We didn't know it then, but those years shaped our decisions moving forward.”

There is no perfect way to begin. Just a first story, or a first question.

SPRING

Renewal

Summer is a natural time to check in. Not because the calendar demands it, but because life creates the opportunity.

Just as meaningful conversations happen over time, disciplined investing is built through consistent review rather than constant change. Mid-year is rarely a time for change simply because the calendar has turned.

It is an opportunity to confirm that your portfolio remains aligned with your long-term objectives, and that your Investment Policy Statement still reflects where you are today.

If your strategy still fits your life, we stay the course. If it doesn't, we adjust with purpose.

Your plan is in place. This summer, put it down and invest your time where it earns the greatest return, passing on your wisdom.

Behind the scenes, we monitor portfolios, evaluate opportunities, and make adjustments when warranted. While the headlines may change, our disciplined investment process continues with the same steady focus.

04 MARKET VIEW

Beyond the Headlines

Global events continue to shape the investment landscape. Armed conflict in Europe and the Middle East, evolving trade policies, persistent inflation, and shifting interest rate expectations have all contributed to increased uncertainty.

While each period of uncertainty feels different, uncertainty itself is a constant in investing. Markets rarely move in a straight line, and meaningful corrections are an expected part of long-term investing.

During periods of market strength, we have continued to rebalance portfolios, realize gains where appropriate, and maintain flexibility. No strategy can eliminate uncertainty, but thoughtful preparation allows us to respond deliberately rather than react emotionally when conditions change.

Our focus remains unchanged: protecting capital, preserving flexibility, and patiently positioning portfolios to take advantage of opportunities as they arise.

The headlines will continue to change. Our discipline will not.
